Re: Transfer FEMA Fund

RECEIVED

BRANFORD TOWN CLERK

As the board is aware, I sought 150,000 from FY 2020 Contingency to supplement the FEMA Fund. My request reflected concern that we have an ongoing emergency due to COVID 19 and two severe storms. At that time I stated the following:

The ultimate costs of these events remains difficult to measure, however, it is comforting that a variety of funding sources are available from state and federal governments.

Additionally, the town is in a strong position to meet the financial obligations associated with the local share requirements.

Unfortunately, it does not appear that the storms will qualify for disaster relief and the current declaration for COVID is not projected to provide substantial relief due to FEMA's interpretation of "eligible protective measures", I am seeking reimbursement through the state's Coronavirus Relief Fund (CRF) and we did receive funds through the department through Health Human Services which will be used for costs related our ambulance service and to a lesser extent the Counseling Center. Despite these funding sources the bulk of these costs are being funded through local tax dollars.

As we still have another month of hurricane season to endure and an uptick in COVID cases we can reasonably expect continued costs and exposure. Therefore, I will continue to update the board periodically on these developments.

Officials concern grows as FEMA's requirements for COVID reimbursement shift

By Jordan Fenster

A shift in pandemic-related costs for which the federal government will reimburse states has left Connecticut officials in the dark on how much money can be recouped, and concerned about damage to the state's effort to combat COVID-19.

The move by the Federal Emergency Management Agency could cost the state millions and, more importantly, is "inconsistent with the goal of stopping or slowing the spread" of COVID-19, a top Connecticut emergency management official said.

At the heart of the shift, according to Brenda Bergeron, is the definition of "eligible protective measures."

When a federal emergency is declared, states like Connecticut are able to recoup 75 percent of costs related to protective measures. On Sept. 1, FEMA told states that when it comes to the COVID-19 pandemic, only costs related to direct actions are eligible.

"They just added this concept of 'emergency protective measures that deal with emergency protective actions,'" said Bergeron, the principal attorney and planning coordinator for the Connecticut Division of Emergency Management and Homeland Security. "They've added another layer of complexity to the eligibility requirements."

Practically, that means the cost of masks for firefighters would be eligible for reimbursement, but the cost of masks for teachers would not.

"Testing of members of the public" would likely not be an eligible cost, FEMA told Connecticut in response to a request for clarification, nor would the cost of temperature screening at public buildings, face masks for the public or any personal protective equipment necessary "for school teachers, election poll workers, town or city clerks, public works employees, medical staff and all other government employees to perform their day-to-day duties."

"Even the things that were considered eligible, this policy greatly restricts the eligibility of what I think of as common sense protecting measures," Bergeron said, arguing that the FEMA's redefinition works against the state's efforts to stop COVID-19.

"You can't stop a pandemic by only having PPE be eligible if it's worn by a first responder or someone in a similar function," she said. "It's not logical."

In an emailed response, FEMA said the agency "has already approved more than $35 billion in support of COVID-19 response efforts."

"FEMA will continue to support the reimbursement of costs required in response to the pandemic for medical care, non-congregate medical sheltering, emergency operations centers for COVID, and other eligible emergency services as listed in the policy," an agency spokesperson said. "This includes the cost of supplies and equipment necessary to carry out eligible emergency work, such as personal protective equipment."

Bergeron confirmed that overtime costs for some employees, and the costs related to medical surge facilities are most likely eligible.

The state has begun to send some requests for reimbursement to FEMA and, theoretically, the disaster-related cost of the pandemic could be astronomical.

For example, Connecticut has received a total of $61,059,354.13 in reimbursed costs from FEMA for damage from hurricane Sandy in 2012.

That disaster had an incident period of a bit more than a week, Oct. 27 through Nov. 8.

For the storm on May 15, 2018, a one-day incident period, the state recouped $16,727,174.

For the severe winter storm on Feb. 8 2013, a three-day incident period, the state was reimbursed $31,099,393.

The incident period for the coronavirus pandemic began January 20, 2020, as set by FEMA, and is ongoing. The pandemic has so far resulted in more than 54,000 positive cases in Connecticut, and 4,480 deaths to date.

"It is unusual to not know at least an estimated amount that the state and its sub-applicants will be receiving from FEMA, nine months into a disaster," Bergeron said. "Of course, this situation is unusual to begin with because the disaster is still ongoing nine months later, which is unprecedented. Usually, we have a disaster event that lasts a day or two or even a number of weeks, but then it is over."

As of this week, the state has requested reimbursement of $700,000 in costs related to the pandemic from FEMA, but Bergeron still has no idea what the final total will be, in part because the agency keeps moving the goalpost.

"My gut instinct is that it should be very large. I don't know what they will consider eligible," she said. "What is making it so difficult to quantify FEMA aid in this disaster, however, is that FEMA has in effect changed the eligibility rules mid-disaster."

There are other sources of funding. There is money coming to the state from the CARES Act, and from the federal Department of Agriculture, among other pools of cash. In addition, FEMA itself is distributing thousands of face masks to Connecticut schools this week.

When all is said and done, Bergeron said it's possible that FEMA's portion of funding might be smaller than what the state recouped after Superstorm Sandy.

The state has conceded some of FEMA's new policies "so that you can at least get some money back to the towns," Bergeron said, though they are attempting to argue that anything done to prevent or slow the progress of a life-threatening virus is a direct action that saves lives. "It's the beginning of a long process."

And it's not just Connecticut. FEMA's redefinition affects how much in disaster funding every state

"It's becoming an issue at the national level," Bergeron said.

Re: Budget Transfers FY 2020

I am requesting the following transfers be placed on the agenda for the Board of Finance October 26, 2020 meeting:

Executive

From:	Description	Amount
10141020-555400	Advertising, Printing, Binding	200
To:
10141020-588225	Women & Families Center	200

The town budgets an annual contribution to the Women's & Families Center in the amount of $300. This year a request was made to increase the contribution to $500 as we had not yet made a contribution for FY 2020. The payment of $500 was to be split between fiscal years but was accidentally processed in total to FY 2020 thereby creating the shortfall in the account.

Solid Waste

From:	Description	Amount
10143040-517000	Salaries	16,760
To:
10143040-544353	Material Handling	16,760

The Board of Finance and RTM recently approved a transfer in the amount of $31,305 for the material handling account. At the time the transfer was requested we believed all invoices had been processed for payment but subsequently learned that the town was waiting for the vendor to submit adjusted invoices for May & June services. The above transfer covers those revised invoices.

Item #11

Re: Tax Collector - Budget Transfer FY 2020

I am requesting the following transfers be placed on the agenda for the Board of Finance September 28th, 2020 meeting:

From:
10149040 588802	Contingency	66,558
To:
10141070 518000	Overtime	48,798
10141070 533280	Consulting	17,760

In light of many factors: high volume of staff turnover as a result of retirements of seasoned staff, loss of in-person training time due to Covid-19, and the impact of the Governor's executive order to defer tax payments, the tax office has faced several challenges. We have brought in a consultant, we will be facing an audit, and we adopted "lockbox" for the first time this year. Added to all of this, tax deferral payments are happening at the same time as sewer use collection—causing a backlog in payment processing.

At the request of the finance department we met to discuss these challenges and we concluded that we should seek the following: 1) create and fund an overtime account within the tax office (similar to what we currently do in the assessor's office). These dollars will fund additional hours for the Assistant Finance Director and Assistant Tax Collector; 2) increase the consulting budget to provide additional training for the staff. The overtime estimates were designed to take us through the remainder of the fiscal year.

The Assistant Finance Director will seek to assess and evaluate the current processes and procedures and incorporate suggestions identified by the consultant(s). Finally she will look improve the coordination between the tax and finance departments while strengthening the existing team to better insulate the town from the turnover associated with the election cycle.

Thank you for your consideration.

Roberta Gill-Brooks, Tax Collector

Dear Branford RTM,

At a prior meeting of the RTM Ways and Means Committee, in which an additional $150,000 was requested for legal fees, no committee member in attendance knew-- nor were any inquiries made--as to what services constituted the amount. In fact, if not for citizen input, the entire $150,000 would have been approved by the committee with no questions asked and with no member knowing what legal services they had just approved funding for.

Furthermore, in direct violation of RTM rules and the town charter that funding must first be appropriated for any expense, the $150,000 requested had already been spent and was being submitted for payment after the fact.

In light of this lack of due diligence and violations of the charter--and the additional revelation at the meeting that only the first selectman reviews and approves the town's legal invoices--it is asked that the RTM send this mater to committee and establish a procedure by which all legal fees are examined and understood by your body before they are approved for payment.

Dear Branford RTM,

In light of increasing citizen concern that in excess of $45 million dollars--generated by over taxation--is being retained by the Town in the fund balance and health insurance accounts, a detailed explanation of the rationale behind this is requested.

While it is understood that it is advisable to hold some amount in the fund balance, it is our further understanding that this need not exceed ten per cent of the town's budget, or about $11 million dollars. In addition, the reasoning behind approximately $20 million dollars sitting in the health insurance account is also unclear.

It is asked that this matter be placed on the RTM agenda and sent to the appropriate committee for a full examination of why taxpayer money is being handled in this manner.

Sincerely,

Wayne N. Cooke
